CUBA ROLLS OUT RED CARPET FOR HISTORIC OBAMA VISIT

I President Barack Obama embarked Sunday on a historic trip to Cuba where a Communist government that vilified the United States for decades prepared a red-carpet welcome. Lifting off from Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, D.C., Obama headed for Havana where the sight of Air Force One, America's iconic presidential jet, touching down on Cuban soil would have been unimaginable not long ago. The three-day trip, the first by a U.S. president in 88 years, is the culmination of a diplomatic opening announced by Obama and Cuban President Raul Castro in December 2014, ending a Cold War-era estrangement that began when the Cuban revolution ousted a pro-American government in 1959. REUTERS

SNOWSTORM FORCES BOSTON SCHOOLS TO CLOSE TODAY

2 As a storm blew toward Boston, officials announced Sunday night that schools would be closed in the city on Monday. "An important factor in this decision is the timing of the snowstorm, with several inches of snow expected to fall during the morning commute," read a statement released by Mayor Marty Walsh and Superintendent Tommy Chang just after 6 p.m. "Safety is the top priority of Boston Public Schools," according to the statement. SPENCER BUELL

RUSSIA MOURNS PLANE CRASH VICTIMS AS INVESTIGATION BEGINS

3 Relatives gathered to mourn the 62 victims of a passenger jet crash in southern Russia on Sunday and officials warned an investigation could take weeks to determine the cause of the downing. At Rostov-on-Don airport about 400 people paid their respects to the 55 passengers and seven crew who died when the Boeing 737-800, operated by Dubai-based budget carrier Flydubai, crashed in the early hours of Saturday. Bereaved relatives laid red and white carnations on a growing pile of flowers, candles and children's toys, framed by photos of the dead. "We mourn," read an inscription listing the victims' names. "What happened cannot be expressed with any words. I can't comprehend how the relatives of the victims will go on living," Rostov resident Marina Bondar told Reuters. REUTERS

BOLARIS' WEATHER WATCH: SPRING SNOW MOVES OUT, MILDER TEMPERATURES AHEAD

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

Waking up this morning, some of you will be shoveling a heavy wet snow while others will be skipping along to work with no snow.

The coastal snowstorm is now off the Southern New England coast and pounding a good chunk of New England with heavy wet snow as late season skiers rejoice.

In the storm's wake, a blustery first Monday of spring will have us reaching for the winter coats this morning.

We really can't complain too much this winter season, despite the January blizzard much of this winter has been snow-free and it will go down as one of our milder winters; thank you El Niño.

By Wednesday the thermometer will begin to surge as the 60s become common once again, except along the coastal locations, as the chilly Atlantic will put a lid on the temperature rise.

Your second half of the week should be on the milder side of the ledger as well with readings still in the 60s. Expect a cool front to start pushing through on Friday with the chance of a few showers.

Watching the potential for a frog choker (that just means heavy rains, personally, I love frogs), arrival time for one looks like the second half of this upcoming weekend.

Boston

Morning rush: Heavy wet snow. Sun returns this afternoon. Windy and cold with a high of 39.

Tuesday: Sunshine and chilly. High of 44.

Wednesday: Sun, then clouds mixing in. Milder, high of 56.

Thursday: Few showers, windy, cloudy, high of 50.

Friday: Shower threat, milder with a high of 57.

Saturday: Mostly sunny. High of 55.

Sunday: Potential heavy rain to move in, late in the day. Highs in the 50s.

After route-shortening push, Southie parade-watchers hold grudge

Neighborhood locals say they aren't getting over mayor-supported effort anytime soon.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

The wounds were fresh and deep for Old Southie's representatives on the sidewalk Sunday as the first bagpipes and drums bleated and clacked their way down Broadway.

It was frustrating when the city's mayor and police commissioner teamed up to call for a St. Patrick's Day celebration route cleaved in half, said those who've grown up wearing green and watching the parade march by.

Mayor Marty Walsh and Police Commissioner

William Evans this year called for a shortened path for marchers and floats, arguing it would be easier to watch over parade-watchers in a more confined area. The Allied War Veterans Council, organizers of the event, challenged the change in court on First Amendment grounds and won.

So the parade followed its time-honored path. It was welcome news for Southie traditionalists.

But neighbors, clad in Celtics jerseys and green fleece, said they won't forget the disruption that almost was.

"A lot of people are pretty upset with the mayor," said Laura Purcello, a 41-year-old Southie lifer who just moved to Dorchester. "A lot of people are saying, 'He's from Dorchester — why not shorten their parade? Why South Boston?'"

She was referring to the

"I totally like the full route," Gardner said. "I'd rather not have them shorten it down. They've been going so long with it the way it is, I don't think it should change."

summertime Dorchester Day Parade — which, spanning more than 3 miles, is roughly as long as the South Boston celebration.

"It's Southie who's always the ones getting picked on and shorted," said Cheryl Allen, 56. She was standing one street over from her lifetime home on Athens Street. "We're given the raw hand all the time. It's just time to stop."

"I don't know what it is with Mayor Walsh — being a Dorchester guy, if he's got a problem with Southie," said a scally cap-wearing Mike Lee, 46, joined by 7-year-old Jordyn. "You've got to go with tradition. That's what all this is about: tradition."

The controversy never reached Orange County, New York — hometown to John Nolan, who traveled out to see the parade for the first time Sunday and watched the action from a Broadway stoop.

He and wife Mary McKenna Nolan said they came to visit. Their daughter recently moved to Quincy.

"So far, so good," said John Nolan.

"Can't get enough St. Patrick's Day," said Mary.

St. Paddy's breakfast brings political yuks

Jokes on Donald Trump, dry cleaning and the Walsh/Baker "bromance" abound.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

Gov. Charlie Baker's approval rating is in the 80s. The city has courted a mega-corporation's head honcho to the Hub. The mayor and the governor get along.

So the jokes went down easy like a cold pitcher of mid-morning beer Sunday morning at the latest St. Patrick's Day Breakfast at the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center.

Cracks about the "bromance" between Baker and Mayor Marty Walsh abounded.

In one video clip, tribute to the duo's efforts to bring GE to the city, Walsh played the role of Adele in a moody black-and-white music video for "Hello." Donning a fur coat and sunglasses, Walsh — as Adele — works to get Baker on the phone and kindle their relationship.

At the video's end, the pair snapped a selfie.

Gov. Charlie Baker held up a laundry basket as a prop to skewer the controversy over Sen. Brian Joyce's relationship with a Randolph dry cleaner. NICOLAUS CZARNEKI

"Ever noticed how small Mayor Walsh's hands are?"

Congressman Stephen Lynch

Also in abundance were digs at the Republican presidential front-runner, with jokes about small hands and border walls recalling Donald Trump.

"People here have been drinking since the crack of dawn, and yet you're still more coherent than Donald Trump," quipped Sen.

Elizabeth Warren.

On the possibility of Republican Scott Brown joining Trump's ticket, Warren said it would be the "perfect reality show matchup: 'Celebrity Apprentice' meets 'The Biggest Loser.'"

"Ever noticed how small Mayor Walsh's hands are?" asked Congressman Stephen Lynch, waving around giant rubber hands from the podium.

The recent controversy over Walsh's bid to shorten the route of the St. Patrick's Day parade was also palpable in the room.

Lynch joked that a bitter Southie planned to build a wall around the neighborhood — and make Walsh pay for it.

When Walsh himself gave a speech, he said he'd only been given two minutes to talk, but reclaimed a five-minute slot by injunction.

He joked about rumors of his aspirations beyond Boston. Repeating again and again that he didn't have plans for higher office, a slideshow on projector screens showed him visiting the White House and the Vatican, posing with Bill Clinton and U2.

Another target: Sen. Brian Joyce, the Democrat facing scrutiny for his dealings with a Randolph dry cleaner.

Baker, reaching the podium, lifted a basket full of clothes into the air.

"I'm sorry I'm late, I've been waiting for Sen. Joyce. I had some laundry that needed done," Baker said. "Boy, I hear he gets a really good deal."

McConnell rules out action this year on high court

Republican U.S. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell on Sunday ruled out Senate confirmation of Democratic President Barack Obama's Supreme Court nominee this year, even if after the November election it appears the next president may pick a liberal who Republicans would like even less.

In television interviews, McConnell said Republican senators had no intention of confirming Democrat Obama's nominee, Merrick Garland, even if Democrats win the White House in November, putting them in the position to nominate someone more liberal than Garland when the new president takes office in January.

Mitch McConnell GETTY IMAGES

"I can't imagine that a Republican-majority Congress, in a lame-duck session, after the American people have spoken (in the election), would want to confirm [Garland]," McConnell told CNN.

"That's not going to happen," McConnell told Fox News on Sunday.

"The principle is the same, whether it's before the election or after the election. The principle is the American people are choosing their next president and their next president should pick this Supreme Court nominee."

Nominees to the lifetime Supreme Court post require Senate confirmation. But McConnell says the Republican-run Senate will not hold a hearing or a vote on Garland.

Republicans have said they want the next president to make the selection, hoping their party wins November's election. Billionaire businessman Donald Trump is the front-runner for the Republican presidential nomination. REUTERS

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Trump refuses to condemn violence at his election rallies

Scenes of mayhem have become increasingly common at Trump's rallies, which have been frequently interrupted by protesters, many of them Democrats, who say his controversial remarks on immigrants and Muslims are dangerous.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump said that "professional agitators" bore much of the blame for violence at his rallies as video showed a protester being beaten and another apparently being grabbed by Trump's campaign manager.

Speaking on ABC's "This Week" on Sunday, Trump defended campaign manager Corey Lewandowski and declined to condemn supporters who have attacked protesters at his increasingly chaotic rallies.

Nor did he back down from his warning that there would be riots in the streets if the Republican Party denied him the nomination for the November election, despite his being the most popular candidate among Republican voters.

Senior figures in the party are openly plotting to prevent Trump from becoming the nominee because they view him as insufficiently conservative, and Trump was due to privately meet with some party leaders in Washington on Monday, the Washington Post reported.

"I don't know what's going to happen, but I will say this, you're going to have a lot of unhappy people," he said on "This Week," predicting anger at the party's national convention in July should someone else end up the nominee. "I don't want to see riots, I don't want to see problems. But you're talking about millions of people."

The 69-year-old candidate has sometimes encouraged his supporters using violence on protesters, and on at least one occasion said that he would like to punch a protester himself.

Television footage from an Arizona rally on Saturday showed a man punching and kicking a protester as he was led out of the event. Another video appeared to show Lewandowski grabbing a protester by the back of his shirt.

Trump declined to condemn the violence and said it was often provoked by protesters, who briefly blocked a highway leading to an Arizona rally on Saturday. REUTERS

'UNITE OR DIE'

Most of the time D.C. is full of intrigue, vicious backbiting and petty disagreements, but there are the bad days, too. Right now both parties are dealing with nasty family feuds. Fixing the fractures before the general election is essential to victory, and that leads my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. TRUMP STUMPERS

Twice now the 2012 GOP presidential nominee, Mitt Romney, has thrown himself across the tracks to derail the Donald Trump train. So far, nada. The mainstreamers are getting ever more panicked over the idea Trump could be their nominee. So you'll hear even more talk this week about a "unity ticket." The idea is to unite all the Repubs who are against Trump behind a single challenger and force a contested convention. But either Kasich or Cruz has to abandon the race to make it work, and neither seems inclined to do so. Stay tuned ... and uh, stay off the tracks.

2. CLINTONIAN CAUTION

The rift between Dems does not seem nearly as deep, but it is worrisome anyway. Hillary Clinton's camp is virtually certain they have the nomination wrapped up, but they'd like a strong showing in the western state primaries on Tuesday to seal the deal. After all, the sooner she can officially send Bernie Sanders home, the sooner she can start making nice with his followers. And she'll need them this November, especially if the GOP hits her as hard as expected.

3. MEANWHILE, BACK AT THE WHITE HOUSE

President Obama and his surrogates will continue pressing the case for a Senate hearing on his Supreme Court nominee, and they'll keep accusing the Republicans of playing politics. But the Dems are playing politics too. They already knew the GOPers were not going to give the nominee a nod, so they are milking it for all the headlines they can get. This is all about each side trying to make the other look unreasonable, but I think this week cooler heads will prevail and a deal is likely ... nah, just kidding. Nobody will budge.

Ben Affleck insists his back tattoo is fake

We've all been having a good laugh about the massive phoenix tattoo on Ben Affleck's back. Or, at least, his exes have. Jennifer Garner teased, Jennifer Lopez said it looks awful, the rest of us agreed. But I guess the joke is on us, as Affleck himself insists to no less reputable of a source than Mario Lopez that it's a "fake for a movie," so calm down. "I actually do have a number of tattoos," Affleck says. "But I try to have them in places where you don't have to do a lot of cover up. They get sort of addictive, tattoos, after a while." Fine,

Jenny Beavan explains her Oscars look

Hey, remember at the Oscars when Jenny Beavan won for her costume design work on "Mad Max" and instead of applauding, a bunch of guys — including "The Revenant" director Alejandro Inarritu, "Spotlight" director Tom Mc-Carthy and Quincy Jones — just frowned at her, arms crossed, apparently reacting to her leather jacket and trousers awards show look? Well, Beavan doesn't. "I was blissfully unaware," she tells the Guardian. After doing the backstage rounds and getting back to her seat, she learned about the bubbling uproar on social media over her look. "The thing that lots of people are missing is that I was wearing a costume. An homage to 'Mad Max,'" she explains. "I have no interest in clothes other than what they tell me about a person. I am a storyteller — I'm not interested in fashion."

And while the hubbub over her attire and others' reactions to it has been maybe a little annoying, she's happy to be part of the conversation. "I'm a feminist with a small F," she says. "In fact, this is probably the first time 'gender' has ever been any kind of an issue for me. But if all this is important, then I would like to use it for good. I'll help, but I'm not willing to become a band leader."

There's a mural of Kanye making out with Kanye

Artists find inspiration everywhere, so why not from the brightly burning flame Kanye West clearly holds for his absolute favorite person in the world? No, not Kim Kardashian, silly. I'm talking about West himself. Nobody loves Kanye like Kanye loves Kanye, which just so happens to be a concept that Australian artist Scott Marsh took and ran with, adorning a wall in Sydney with a 20-foot mural of West making out furiously with himself, hands all groping and impassioned. The image is based on a make-out photo of West and Kardashian from the 2015 Grammys red carpet, so the shorter West in this scenario has a rather impressive rump — something I don't think either Kanye would complain about in this scenario.

DAILY VIDEO CALORIES...

Foods you thought were healthy but actually aren't

It's really about time we stopped assuming something's healthy just because the commercials say so. This BuzzFeed video does a quick and snappy job of tackling how things like added sugars in granola and smoothies and extra sodium in "healthy" chip options can make packaged versions of supposedly healthy foods surprisingly less so. The best — and probably most widely reported — is that fast-food salads like the ones McDonald's has been pitching as a healthy alternative can sometimes have more calories than a Big Mac. And honestly, why are you getting a salad at McDonald's anyway? You're at McDonald's. Actually be at McDonald's.

"GROUNDHOG DAY"

Bill Murray killing himself with a toaster is one of the comedic high points of 1993's "Groundhog Day." PROVIDED

It's not clear how long Bill Murray's cantankerous weatherman spends living the same day. It could be a few months. Or, as director Harold Ramis suggested, it could be thousands of years. A smooth blend of the crowd-pleasing and the unimaginably dark, it's a nice movie about a jerk being de-jerked. But its structure is also based on Elisabeth Kubler-Ross' model of the five stages of death. It's the kind of demon mainstream hit in which the stretch where our hero repeatedly kills himself is arguably the comedic high point. Keep your eyes peeled for the young Michael Shannon, as an excitable newlywed and WWF fanatic.

"THE FORBIDDEN ROOM"

Guy Maddin's "The Forbidden Room" was carefully made to look like it's an oldie. KINO LORBER

Unfailingly goofy Canadian retro-auteur Guy Maddin ("My Winnipeg") hasn't made a feature-length film in ages, which may explain why "The Forbidden Room" simply overflows with goodies. Indeed, this gonzo shape-shifter — which, as per usual with Maddin, looks like it's been forgotten for decades — contains at least a few dozen stories and about 10,000 jokes. By turns a submarine movie, a spelunking movie, a volcano movie and a lumberjack movie, it may drive you wonderfully crazy if you watch it in a single sit.

"UNFORGIVEN"

Clint Eastwood tends to be seen as a reactionary brute, delivering magnum force with a big gun. But look closely and he's more evolved, always questioning his yen for violence and his status as a badass icon. To make it loud and clear that he wasn't a Cro-Magnon, he made this 1992 Best Picture winner, playing a grizzled ex-outlaw who has to reactivate his dark side for a greater good.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Rachel Roy's guide to building a workplace wardrobe

In her new book, the designer and style icon explains why she follows her intuition — not the latest trends.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alifah.salario@metro.us

If you're getting excited about dusting off those spring clothes, then Rachel Roy's "Design Your Life: Creating Success Through Personal Style" will speak to you. Roy — whose feminine dresses have appeared on the likes of Michelle Obama and Kim Kardashian — is more concerned with following her style intuition than the latest trends. She gave us four tips for dressing up for work — and life.

Sharpen your style vision

Curating a vision board can help you "realize what you are trying to call into your life," says Roy. "There doesn't have to be any rhyme or reason [to the board]; you don't have to be a creative person, per se. You just pull out what you're drawn to."

Find your own trends

Instead of hunting down the latest fads, seek out your personal "must-haves" — the wardrobe pieces that make you feel confident and most like yourself. For Roy, who counts Cary Grant among her style icons, it's all about trench dresses and blazers.

Invest in your frame

Growing up, Roy owned one pair of knockoff tennis shoes at a time. The day she bought her first pair of Manolo Blahniks (on sale) was epic, and it taught her to invest in wardrobe staples. "After shoes, for me it would be a handbag or a watch. So again, [wardrobe staples] refers to how are you framing yourself," she says. "They last, and you can have fun with everything else."

Dress like a #boss

Roy believes in effort, not hard-and-fast workplace wardrobe rules.

"You must make the effort to show that you are grateful, thankful and respectful for the [work] opportunity that you've been given," says Roy. "With that said, I like to give women easy options to get there."

B's with big week ahead after getting roughed up out West

The road-tough B's weren't themselves during their Western swing.

RICH SLATE
@RichSlate
sports@metro.us

Well, the good news for the Bruins (39-26-8) is that they won't see another California team again this season — unless it is in the 2016 Stanley Cup Final and it's likely that they would not complain much about that admittedly unexpected development.

Boston went 0-for-3

Winding down

The Bruins have just nine games remaining in the regular season — with the playoffs starting on April 15.

- The B's have a pair of tough games this week as they'll play at the Rangers on Wednesday before returning home to face the Panthers on Thursday night. The Rangers trail only the Capitals in the Metro Division and Florida leads the Atlantic Division.

on its just-completed road trip to the Golden State, ending with a 2-1 loss against the Kings (44-22-5) on Saturday night at Staples Center. The B's lost, 3-2, against the Sharks (40-25-6) last Tuesday and got blanked by the Ducks (39-22-9), 4-0, on Friday. A pair of one-goal losses versus two of the better teams in the West shows that they made progress, but all told, Boston went 0-6 against the three California clubs after they had all won at TD Garden earlier this season.

"You can like your team's performance in the second and third [period], but at the end of the day, we're going home empty-handed and that's not what we came for," admitted Bruins head coach Claude Julien. "So maybe it was good that we were able to show that we're capable of playing with these guys if we set our minds to it."

Though they didn't gain any points in California, the B's didn't exactly melt as Zdeno Chara got into a rare fight (vs. Clayton Stoner) against the Ducks and fellow defenseman Adam McQuaid dropped the gloves with LA's Dwight King.

Brad Marchand and the Bruins went winless out West. GETTY IMAGES

Boston is now off until Wednesday (8 p.m., NBC-SN) when it visits the New York Rangers (40-24-8). Of their nine remaining contests, four are at home (starting with Thursday's key meeting with the Florida Panthers) and five are on the road. More importantly for the B's, seven of the nine tilts are against Eastern Conference foes. After starting their last road trip on top in the Atlantic Division, the Bruins have dropped to third-place behind the Panthers (40-23-9) and Tampa Bay Lightning (41-26-5). Florida is three points ahead of Boston and Tampa Bay is two points ahead of them, plus each Sunshine State squad has played one fewer game than the Black and Gold.

The Bruins-Rangers games are always very competitive and the importance of the Bruins-Panthers tilt is obvious. But Boston does get a break this coming Saturday (7, NESN) as it visits Toronto (25-35-11) — the worst team in the NHL. Keep in mind that while this past week didn't really show it, the B's are still one of the best road teams (23-10-3) in the league. The B's are .500 at home (16-16-5) and their goal-differential is plus-19. The Bruins are 5-3-2 in their last 10 games so it is critical that they can get over this winless trip to California quickly in order to reach their bigger goals (playoff spot, home ice, etc.) in 2015-16.

Aries Confusion will result if you are inconsistent or send mixed signals. Consider your options before you initiate a change. Nurture your mental, physical and emotional health.

Taurus Spend time with loved ones today. A serious discussion will lead to the changes you want to make. You can lower your overhead if you consider an alternative lifestyle.

Gemini Check over personal papers and size up your financial obligations. Look for a way to avoid costly expenditures. Keeping secrets will lead to repercussions.

Cancer Helping others will bring you satisfaction. Romance will bring you closer to someone special. Make your arrangements early in order to avoid unpredictable situations.

Leo There is a fine line between being relentless and vengeful. Consider your motives and try your best to do what's right. Use your intellect, charm and expertise to get ahead.

Virgo Romance should be your priority. Sharing your feelings, intentions and plans will enhance a cherished relationship. A day trip will lead to a memorable journey.

Libra Put your cash in a safe place and work diligently to lower your overhead. Personal and home improvements should be geared toward future financial gains.

Scorpio Express your feelings. Negotiate on your behalf instead of relying on someone else to do so for you. Romance is encouraged. Use your imagination and make plans for two.

Sagittarius When it comes to being informed, you are best off making your conclusions based on fact, not hearsay. An honest approach to whatever you do will help you avoid a mishap.

Capricorn Consider your dreams and work toward building a lifestyle that will help you reach your goal. Love and romance will make your success worth so much more.

Aquarius Look out for pitfalls. Not everyone will be on your side or willing to help. Precision and dedication on your part will pay off. Don't fear making a personal change.

Pisces You may want to revise the way you live or how you earn your living. There is room for improvement, and with a little motivation, you'll capture your dream. EUGENIA LAST
